1. Users find information, post photos, rate stores, and write reviews on the business page, but what exactly does a small business owner do on Yelp? After your store is verified, you should then make sure your page is up-to-date with accurate information, like your store phone number, address, menu items, etc. The more information you provide, the more reasons customers have to make a visit! You can also optimize your SEO (search engine optimization) by adding in keywords about your business, just like you would do on a website. Doing this will give you useful information such as demographic information about reviewers and a number of site visitors through Yelp's analytics page that you can use to understand your market better.

5 Things You Absolutely Need to Know as a Business Owner on Yelp

FUN FACT: Contrary to popular opinion, restaurants are not the most dominant business category on Yelp. According to a recent Yelp report, shopping is the biggest category at 23%, so if you own a retail store, time to get on board if you aren't already.

Positive reviews should happen organically because customers love your store! Yelp does not recommend that you ask customers to write reviews or bribe customers with discounts – huge no-no. However, you can still attract customers to your Yelp page by putting a link to your page on your website, on your email signature, social media, and by encouraging people to check-in to your store. The key is to spread awareness and engagement.

As for an insider tip... While it's debatable whether customer service is the most important aspect to a business, it does make an impact on Yelp. A Yelp study shows that if someone had a good customer service experience, they're over 5 times more likely to give a 5 star review on Yelp! Make your customers feel special and reap the rewards.

If this does not work out, you should respond publicly, in a level-headed fashion. Yelpers are likely to read both the negative review AND the merchant's response before making up their mind. By explaining the situation and how you have dealt with this privately, you can make the situation work in your favor by showing that you do care about your customers.

“Not recommended” reviews are reviews that Yelp suspects are biased and filters based on their automated software. These reviews are only accessible through a tiny link at the bottom of every business page. This practice is one of the main reasons behind much of Yelp's controversy around extortion.
