However, at the East of France international Exhibition that opened in Nancy on 1 May 1909, Baccarat succeeded brilliantly in doing just that despite stiff competition from the Saint Louis crystal works, the Meisenthal and Goetzbruck glass works in Moselle, as well as the Vosges and Daum glassworks.

Visitors to the Baccarat stand marvelled at the grandiose accumulation of crystals and although it was not participating in the competition, since its director, Mr Michaut, was chairing the jury, several of Baccarat's craftsmen received individual distinctions.

These genuine magicians of glass were capable of blowing stemware such as the so-called 'Tsar service' made entirely in coloured-overlay clear crystal and decorated with spectacular diamond points and palmettes.

The same glass blowers also excelled in creating the so-called 'Negus vase', a monumental vase gilded with bronze whose magnificence charmed Menelik II, the Negus of Abyssinia.

Also admired were Baccarat's neoclassical beauties such as the Medicis, an i
